What does protecting our integrity mean?

Our health service has high standards. It's important to ensure the people who provide or use valuable health service resources:

- use those resources fairly and transparently
- act with honesty and integrity at all times.

Dishonesty can take away health resources and funding from those who need it. A lack of integrity can negatively affect clients, staff and the wider reputation of the health service.

Who is there to help?

The Ministry of Health operates an Audit & Compliance team. This team investigates, and provides education about, a range of fraudulent and other activities that could compromise the high standards of our health system.

They can't do it alone – it's up to everyone to protect the integrity of our health service by talking about their concerns.

What should be reported?

- Dishonesty or inappropriate use of public money
- Inappropriate use of technology
- Workplace bullying
- Theft
- Drug use
- Any form of harassment
- Any activity that may be a breach of a Code of Conduct
- Anything else you're uncomfortable about

If you're concerned something doesn't seem right, talk about it. See over for who to talk to.

What happens to information that's reported?

All information provided to the Health Integrity Line is kept anonymous.

- Callers deal with specially-trained operators.
- Operators won't ask for a name and the call won't be recorded or traced.

All calls will be passed on to the appropriate team or agency to follow up.

If you're an employee and are calling about serious wrongdoing in or by your workplace you'll be advised of your rights under the Protected Disclosures Act 2000 (known as the 'Whistle-blower Act').
